QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. The case law of New York State specifically denies testamentary immunity to a physician who testifies that another physician is a "quack", when the use of that defamatory term is "justified" by nothing more than that the two physicians represent competing schools of medical thought.

In the present case, the highest court in New York State has refused to uphold its own law, alleging wrongly that all medical testimony is "absolutely privileged". The State has given no reason why its own prior case law should be ignored.

The question is this: Is it lawful for New York State to refuse, without cause or explanation, to uphold this legal precedent which the State itself set over 130 years ago, and which has been cited as case law as recently as 1975?

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the New York State Court of Appeals

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

The Petitioner, Ken Biegeleisen, MD, respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment and opinion of the New York State Court of Appeals regarding the issues of testamentary immunity raised therein.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Appellate Division of the New York State Supreme Court appears at Appendix 2.

A Motion for Leave to Appeal to the New York State Court of Appeals was denied by the New York State Court of Appeals. See Appendix 3.

JURISDICTION

The New York State Court of Appeals filed its opinion on April 28, 1994 (Appendix 3). This petition is filed within ninety (90) days of the opinion. Jurisdiction of this Court is predicated on 28 U.S.C. §1254(1)

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION INVOLVED

The Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution says that "No State shall... deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws".

Three people: a medical plaintiff, a lawyer, and an "expert" witness; have deprived me of property, employing the non-Constitutionally-sanctioned doctrine of "testamentary immunity" as a personal weapon against me. They have, in effect, committed legally-sanctioned perjury for personal gain.

In spite of years of exhausting efforts to find justice, the law has provided no remedy for this.

A legal system which provides a mechanism for the unscrupulous to rob and defame the innocent, and which denies the innocent any means of legal recourse, cannot be said to be providing "equal protection of the laws" to all its citizens.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case is not about "hurt feelings". I do not care what people call me, either on or off the witness stand.

But in the month of December, 1991, I was convicted of a "crime" I did not commit. I was convicted by perjurious testimony. This, and this alone, is the injustice which gives rise to this Petition.

In the underlying medical malpractice case Brotman vs. Biegeleisen (NY State Supreme Court Index no. 1984/86), I was accused by the plaintiff, Valerie Brotman, of causing permanent neurological damage to the entire outside of her left leg, from the knee down to the tips of the toes. This allegedly came about as a result of injection treatment for a common cosmetic problem, known to the public as "spider veins". The treatment was bilateral. This so-called "complication"; massive unilateral destruction of large portions of the nervous system by tiny injections into the skin, is unknown to medical science.

The patient had sciatica before I ever met her. The records of the chiropractor who had treated her for sciatica were subpoenaed, but they had conveniently been "lost".

No one involved in the defense against this ridiculous accusation ever dreamed that the plaintiff might prevail, but she did. Her victory was made possible by the perjurious testimony of Julius Jacobson, MD.

Dr. Jacobson began his testimony with the statement

> "This is quackery. This is unethical pursuance of money by somebody who happens to have an MD degree but has no principles".
> (Jacobson testimony, p. 28).

The remainder of his lengthy testimony was an astonishing collection of lies, some of them so obvious that a lay person should have recognized them as lies at face value.

But Jacobson proudly trumpeted his lofty credentials (he is, among other things, Chairman of Vascular Surgery at New York's Mount Sinai Medical Center), and the jury chose veneer over truth.

His motivation need not be speculated about. He admitted, repeatedly while under oath, that he was in Court specifically to "put Dr. Biegeleisen out of business".

(Jacobson testimony, pp. 42-43, reiterated on p. 45, reiterated again on pp. 47-48)

Now, I have not, to this day, ever met Dr. Jacobson, and I do not know him personally. But he also testified, under oath, that he wanted to put my father out of business (see pp. 47-48 of Jacobson testimony).

My father, Dr. H.I. Biegeleisen, and Julius Jacobson were profession rivals throughout their careers. My father was a pioneer in the development of injection treatment of varicose veins, a procedure he dubbed "sclerotherapy". Jacobson was a leading practitioner of the surgical treatment of varicose veins, called "stripping".

Throughout the 20th century, practitioners of treatment of varicose veins by injection and surgery have been at odds with each other. Historically, from about 1900 until about 1920, most veins were treated surgically. Then the "mood" of the medical profession changed, and from about 1920 to 1940, virtually all varicose veins were injected. It was during that period that my father rose to prominence in this field.

After 1940, the "mood" of the medical profession changed again, and by 1960, virtually all varicose veins were again being treated surgically. It was during that era that Jacobson rose to prominence in that field.

Since 1980, reason has prevailed over dogma. Now it is universally recognized, both here and abroad, that both injections and surgery have a place in the treatment of varicose veins.

But Dr. Jacobson maintains an extreme prejudice against vein injection; a prejudice which refuses to yield to modern medical research; a prejudice which refuses to consider a massive body of medical literature which is against him; a prejudice which refuses to consider the fact that every single modern textbook of vascular surgery includes a detailed description of the indications for, and the method of, the treatment of varicose veins by injection.

Because Dr. Jacobson could not have caused me to lose this case by telling the truth, he opted to lie. It is no exaggeration to say that if I listed all his lies, they would fill this entire booklet, and there would be no room left for discussion.

I shall make specific mention of one such lie. It involved the issue most central to a medical malpractice trial; causation. When asked whether I was responsible for the patient's symptom (numbness of the outer side of the left leg, extending from the knee to the ankle), Dr. Jacobson said that he was "absolutely sure" that I was; that it was "beyond question" (Jacobson testimony, p. 36).

When asked how the alleged injury had come about, he testified (pp. 62-68) that I had damaged the entire nervous system of the skin of the outside of the patient's leg, including the major nerve trunk which was responsible for sensation from the knee down to the foot (p. 68). When asked for the name of this nerve, he testified that the nerves involved have "no names", and that they are "not listed in the anatomy books" (p. 65). "Call it what you want", he said (p. 63).

I submit to this Court that this testimony, i.e. that > the major cutaneous nerve trunk inervating the outside of the human leg from the knee to the tips of the toes has "no name" and is "not listed in the anatomy books", is perjury at face value.

That notwithstanding, the various divisions of the Courts below were provided with enough supporting affidavits, from highly esteemed medical specialists, to have absolutely dispelled any possible lingering notion that major nerves of the human body might have "no names".

Jacobson himself, in all his many pages of legal defense, has never denied that he lied. He simply asks the Court's protection, on the grounds that New York law protects all testimony given on the witness stand. However, this is not true. New York law does not permit one doctor to call another a "quack", when the basis of that remark is no more than that they are in competing specialties.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The facts in this case are virtually indistinguishable from the facts in White

v. Carroll (42 NY - 3 Hand, 161), a nineteenth century case which is cited 47 times in Shepard's New York Citations. I have located at least one citation as recent as 1975 (Wiser v. Koval, 50 Appellate Division NY 2d 523-524). Thus, the findings of the White Court are still held to be valid case law in the State of New York.

White v. Carroll was a case arising from a dispute between members of two competing medical specialties, allopathy and homeopathy. In 1858 and 1859 a proceeding was going on before the surrogate of Montgomery county, New York, regarding the testamentary capacity of a man by the name of Jay Phillips, who had been under the care of both the plaintiff, a homeopath, and the defendant, an allopath. The defendant was asked whether there was any other physician in attendance on Mr. Phillips at that time, and he answered "Not as I know of". The question was re-phrased, to which the defendant replied

> "Not as I know of; I understand he had a quack, I would not call him a physician; I understand that Dr. White, as he is called, had been there".

These words were transcribed, and the plaintiff, Dr. White, subsequently brought an action for slander and libel.

The defendant moved for dismissal on the grounds that his testimony was pertinent and responsive, and therefore absolutely privileged. The motion was denied, and the defendant excepted.

The Judge in the trial Court instructed the jury that > "if...they should believe from [the] evidence, that the defendant, though testifying at the time as a witness, and as such entitled to the protection of the law, in so using the words proved, was actuated by malice; that he used the words for the mere purpose of defaming the plaintiff, then the law withdrew the protection it would otherwise have afforded him, and he became amenable to the consequences of uttering the slander, or of publishing the libel".

The defendant appealed to the New York State Court of Appeals, which unanimously upheld the Judgment, stating that "the question whether the defendant was protected under the circumstances, was not a question of law for the court, but was a question of fact for the jury. It was really a question of conduct, of motive, of good faith and honest purpose, or of bad faith and malicious purpose.

"The question was, whether the defendant did, or did not, avail himself of the occasion to maliciously answer the questions put to him as a witness, in the way he did.

"The question was most emphatically a question for the jury; and I think it was submitted to the jury as favorably for the defendant as he had a right to expect or ask...I think the judgment should be affirmed, with costs."

The parallels between White v. Carroll and the present case are as exact as can be, except that the malice expressed by Jacobson exceeds, by many orders of magnitude, the malice expressed by Dr. Carroll.

In White v. Carroll, the plaintiff was a homeopath, a less traditional form of medical practice, and the defendant was an allopath, a more traditional form of medicine.

In Biegeleisen v. Jacobson, the plaintiff is a medical doctor specializing in the treatment of venous diseases by injection, a widely-practiced but less traditional form of medical practice, and the defendant is a surgical doctor specializing in the treatment of venous diseases by surgery, a more traditional form of medical practice. Thus the parallel is quite exact.

The defendant called me a "quack", and then produced, in "evidence" of this, a collection of towering lies. His motive is no mystery; he himself openly and proudly admitted it: he was in Court to put both my father and me out of business.

The White Court referred to a witnesses "conduct, motive, good faith and honest purpose". Dr. Jacobson's conduct was repulsive, his motive was openly evil, his good faith was nowhere in evidence, and in 104 pages of testimony, there was hardly a statement to be found which was not a lie.

Above all, he deceived the court into awarding money to a plaintiff with no injuries, by claiming damage to nerves with "no names", "not found in textbooks", according to a mechanism not known to medical science. If this is not injustice, then there is no injustice.

Excepting the possibility that I am a "quack", the law of New York State appears to me to be absolutely clear in prohibiting the use of the witness stand as a place to exact a personal or professional vendetta against another physician.

Therefore, I am forced, once again (having done so in the lower Courts), to raise the question: Am I a "quack"?

I have presented papers, lectured, and chaired symposia at most of the major American and International venous vascular conventions of the last 15 years, often by invitation of Jacobson's own colleagues in vascular surgery. I have published numerous papers in peer-reviewed scientific and medical journals. I recently authored a chapter in a major venous diseases textbook to be published by Mosby, one of the nation's leading conservative medical publishers.

I may not be the world's greatest doctor, but I do not think that my activities are adequately described by the word "quackery".

Furthermore, the methods I use, contrary to Jacobson's perjurious testimony, are practiced by literally thousands of physicians throughout the United States. They have become part of the standard practice of medicine in America.

Indeed, Dr. Robert Berger, a dermatologist who practices the same technique I use, so testified in the lower Court on my behalf. Dr. Berger is at Jacobson's own hospital, Mount Sinai Medical Center. Furthermore, Jacobson's Department of Vascular Surgery, over which he presides as Chairman, conducts an annual Venous Symposium at which Dr. Berger is an invited participant.

Every year at this Symposium, Dr. Berger, by invitation of Jacobson's own Department, presents a lecture demonstration on the injection treatment of spider veins by the same method I use.

And yet Dr. Jacobson, while testifying under oath, having been asked whether there were any dermatologists in New York who inject spider veins, had the chutzpah to say

"I don't know of any dermatologists who do it in New York".

(Jacobson testimony, p. 48).

What harm was done to the plaintiff in White v. Carroll, that the Court should have permitted an action for defamation? None, save that his good name was the subject of insult. It seems unlikely that many people ever became aware of this insult.

And yet, substantial harm has been done to me. My name has now been added to the so-called "National Practitioner Data Bank", alongside all other physicians who have been convicted of the crime of medical malpractice. This databank is open to the public, so that the whole world can see that I am a "dangerous criminal". And what was my crime? I injected a nerve with "no name", "not found in textbooks". What sort of a nation is this?

I recently received an extortionist letter from an attorney who was contemplating a frivolous lawsuit against me. She wrote that > "My investigation has revealed that there have been several claims initiated against you, including a full jury trial verdict of approximately $35,000 in the matter of Brotman v. Biegeleisen...In order to avoid the necessity of litigation, which will prove costly to you in that you must retain counsel, we will agree to a settlement amount in excess of the amount awarded in the Brotman matter".

This is, plainly and simply, blackmail. Do NOT, therefore, say that "no harm has been done".

If the Court cannot issue a Writ of Certiorari in this case, then I maintain that there is no possibility of justice for a physician. Jacobson did not read the medical record before testifying, and he boasted of that as if it was to his credit to have come to Court ignorant. He did not examine the patient, claiming falsely that "no examination was possible" in such cases. And, he did not know who he was testifying against. That's right - he admitted, under oath, that he was not sure exactly who had administered the treatment he was in court testifying about; whether it was me, or whether it was my father:

> "I had patients that had been seen by the father, and I knew he had a son in practice. And I wasn't sure who had actually given it [i.e., the treatment]" (Jacobson testimony, p. 86).

If this Court is so desirous of getting witnesses to come to Court and testify "freely" that it will tolerate an "expert" who didn't read the medical record, didn't examine the patient, didn't know who he was testifying against, and claimed that the major cutaneous nerve trunk inervating the outside of the leg has "no name" and is "not found in textbooks", then I say that a medical malpractice trial in America is nothing but a sham; a charade, acted out solely for the personal benefit of the members of the legal profession and their clients.

The White Court held that one physician cannot call another a "quack" simply because they are in competing fields of medicine. Surely, the testimony of Dr. Carroll, in that case, cannot conceivably be held to have been "impertinent by any standard", since it was given in response to a question put to him by the court itself about his adversary-to-be, Dr. White. But the injection of the word "quack" was held by that court to have been motivated by malice, and therefore actionable.

Dr. Jacobson's testimony, in the present case, was more malicious by many orders of magnitude than that of Dr. Carroll. I am not a "quack", and the methods I practice are in widespread use, both throughout the United States and abroad. I have been defamed, and, worse still, I have been convicted of a crime I did not commit.

I am asking this Court, in the interests of justice for both doctor and patient, to do the right thing. I am asking this Court to issue a Writ of Certiorari in this case, so that these wrongs can be righted.

STAGE OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COURTS BELOW AT WHICH QUESTIONS SOUGHT TO BE REVIEWED WERE RAISED

I am a pro se litigant. When I initiated this case, I was unable to find a lawyer to represent me. Because the law leans strongly toward testamentary immunity, no lawyer I consulted with was willing to accept this case.

So in the beginning I employed the services of a personal friend, Mr. Jan Blau, an attorney with no experience in slander/libel. He refused to let me see any of his legal papers, and therefore, at all times in the proceedings before the lower court and the Appellate Division, I was ignorant of what he had submitted.

At the Appellate Division, his oral arguments bore no resemblance to the discussions we had had about the case, and I therefore discharged him and proceeded pro se.

The legal questions raised in this Petition were raised by me in my "Affidavit of Ken Biegeleisen sworn to May 20, 1992 in Opposition to Defendant's Motion to Dismiss", submitted to the Supreme Court of the State of New York. Appended to that Affidavit in Opposition were seven Exhibits (A-G) which are critical to my defense against the multiple defamations I have been subjected to.

In particular, the parallels between this case and White vs. Carroll are given on pages 17-20 of that Affidavit.

All of the lower courts totally ignored this Affidavit, each one alleging that medical expert testimony is "absolutely privileged".

Regarding my former attorney's various submissions to the courts below, however, I did not have anything to do with their preparation, and I was not permitted to see them until long after they were submitted. To the extent that I understand them, they do not seem to represent my point of view, and they do not reflect the discussions we had which supposedly led to their creation.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Petitioner respectfully requests that this Court grant his petition for the issuance of a writ of certiorari.

SHAINSWIT, J.:

Plaintiff doctor was the defendant in a medical malpractice suit, against whom the jury awarded money damages; defendant doctor was the expert witness for plaintiff in that suit. Plaintiff now sues for defamation; defendant moves to dismiss. The motion is granted. There are several independently conclusive reasons why the complaint cannot stand.

(1) An expert witness at trial is immunized from a suit for defamation. His relevant testimony is absolutely privileged, whether he testifies as to opinions or as to alleged facts. Tolisano v. Texon, 75 NY2d 732 (1989); Star v. Simonelli, 76 AD2d 861 (2d Dept. 1980).

(2) Nothing in the material complained of was irrelevant to the issues being tried, or to the subject matter of the defendant doctor's expertise.

(3) A defamation suit cannot be used as a vehicle to retry the probative value of the expert testimony. It is for the jury to make that evaluation. The jury cannot be second-guessed by the unsuccessful party taking the defamation route.

(4) To permit a defamation suit of this nature would tend to stifle the willingness of experts to come forward. It would be against public policy to set up an iron curtain barring access to the witness box.

(5) If this case were tolerated, a disgruntled and unsuccessful litigant could use the defamation suit to harass witnesses who testified in a manner or on subjects not to a litigant's liking. We would thus be opening up retaliatory lawsuits designed to retry, in a new setting, issues that had become res judicata.

Society has a compelling interest to insure that controversies are disposed of with finality, through traditional legal procedures. The instant defamation suit seeks to create new warfare, with all issues now ripe for rekindling. This court will not permit the resumption of a battle which has been concluded by a jury.

This constitutes the decision and order of the court.

July 17, 1992, which granted defendant's motion for summary judgment dismissing this defamation action, unanimously affirmed, without costs.

The statements defendant made during his testimony as an expert witness in the medical malpractice action that had been brought against plaintiff cannot be the subject of a defamation action unless they constituted falsehoods "so obviously irrelevant as to warrant an inference of express malice" (Tolisano v Texon 144 AD2d 267 [Smith, J. dissenting], revd for reasons stated in dissenting mem 75 NY2d 732). Such is not here the case. Although blunt and degrading, the statements were primarily expressions of opinion, not of facts, and in any event, were directly relevant to defendant's opinion concerning the status of sclerotherapy as an accepted medical practice for cosmetic surgery. Nor does it avail plaintiff to argue that certain of defendant's statements were not only factually false but perjurious.

We have considered plaintiff's remaining contentions and find them to be without merit.
